Property Tax Reductions 101:

How to Navigate the Board of Revision

March 10

12 – 1 p.m.

1.0 Hours New Lawyer Training credit pending

PROGRAM

Did a client recently receive a surprisingly high property tax bill? Consider applying for a reduction of the property's taxable value. Your county's board of revision will conduct a hearing, and you and your client will bear the burden of proving that the property was over-valued. If the board reduces the property's value, the new value will usually apply to future tax years, which will save money on tax bills well into the future. Jeff Levine will explain the intricacies to this process and optimize the opportunity for a value reduction.

PRESENTER:

Jeffrey A. Levine is a member of Strauss Troy's Litigation and Corporate/Business Practice Groups. Jeff's litigation experience in state and federal courts includes the preparation of successful dispositive motions and appellate briefs, the delivery of oral arguments, and the management of negotiations in mediation and settlement conferences. He has also served as counsel in complex commercial litigation, including nationwide shareholder derivative, product liability class actions and disputes between owners of closely-held corporations. In addition, Jeff has extensive experience representing clients before local boards of revision for real estate tax assessment valuations.
